Two women found dead in FCT

Two women have been found dead in separate locations in the Federal Capital Territory (FCT) after falling victim to “one chance” gangs.

Their names were given as Chinemerem Chuwumeziem, a nurse with the Federal Medical Centre (FMC), Jabi and Princess Ochigbo. Ochigbo’s body was said to have been found by the roadside.

Chairman of the National Association of Nigerian Nurses and Midwives (NANNM), FCT Council, Jama Medan, said Chuwumeziem closed from afternoon duty on January 3, and boarded a vehicle on her way home but never arrived alive.

Medan noted that her body was dumped in a “most inhumane and heartbreaking manner.”

He described the killing as not only an attack on the nursing profession but “an assault on healthcare workers and humanity at large.”

The association chairman called on security agencies in the FCT to immediately investigate the circumstances surrounding her death.

According to an X post, documents recovered from where Ochigbo’s body was found suggested she might have been a staff member of the FCT High Court.

The handler, who provided the update with an image of the deceased woman and her ID, added that her bag was seen a short distance away from her body.

Efforts to reach the FCT Police Command for updates on the two incidents proved abortive, as SMS and WhatsApp messages sent to its spokesperson, Josephine Adeh, were not responded to as of press time.
