Community seeks arrest of son's killers

The Ugborodo Community Management Committee has called on law enforcement and relevant federal authorities to ensure the arrest, investigation, and prosecution of the individuals involved who killed their son, Emiko Onuwaje.

At a press conference last weekend, the committee said Onuwaje was killed during an attack allegedly carried out by assailants acting on the instructions of a sponsor.

The committee maintained that the incident followed a series of reported threats and acts of intimidation in the community.

Chairman of the committee, Emmanuel Onuwaje, said witness and evidence relating to the incident had been submitted to security agencies.

He noted that while arrests were reportedly made at the scene and the Inspector-General of Police (IGP) directed an investigation, key suspects and alleged sponsors had not been charged.

The committee raised concerns over perceived “undue delay in the investigation and prosecution,” warning that failure to act could undermine public confidence in law enforcement and the justice system.

It further alleged the unlawful deployment and possible involvement of uniformed security personnel in the incident, and called for an independent investigation into their conduct in line with applicable laws and service regulations.

The community is demanding the arraignment of suspects, an investigation into alleged sponsors, disciplinary action against any compromised security personnel, and adequate protection for witnesses.

The committee urged the IGP, Department of State Services, National Security Adviser, military high command, and Attorney-General of the Federation to treat the case as a matter of public safety and national security.

The victim was killed on December 20, at Ogidigben amid reports of youth leadership tussle in the community.
