At least one person has reportedly been killed following a violent clash between suspected members of the Aiye and Eiye confraternities in the Awoyaya area of Lagos State.

PUNCH Metro gathered from a video posted on the Telegram account of Naija Confra, a platform that reveals cult-related violence, that the incident threw the community into confusion and panic.

The clash was said to have started on Monday and continued into Tuesday, resulting in the death of one resident identified simply as “Pelebe”. In a short video seen by PUNCH Metro, the victim, dressed in blue jeans and a white shirt, was shown lying on the ground and grimacing in pain.

Another video seen on the channel on Wednesday captured residents running for safety while others stood at a distance filming the chaos.

Additional graphic photos showed a victim with a bloodied leg.

“Earlier today (Tuesday), we reported a serious cult clash in the Awoyaya area of Ibeju-Lekki, involving Eiyé and Aiye, where killings happened yesterday (Monday) and today (Tuesday),” the post partly read, adding that another person “was shot in the leg in the Iya Alagbo area” during a separate attack.
