“The students were reportedly on their way from Nsukka to Enugu to attend a music concert organized by popular Nigerian artiste, David Adeleke, popularly known as Davido, when the unfortunate incident occurred.

“Regrettably, Nwankwo Chukwuebuka Chrisantus, a third-year student in the Department of Economics, lost his life in the accident. Other students who sustained varying degrees of injury were admitted to the Bishop Shanahan Hospital, Nsukka. Some of them have been discharged, while others with more serious injuries are still receiving treatment at the hospital.

“The University Management and the entire University Community commiserate with the family, friends, and colleagues of the deceased student and pray for the repose of his soul. The Management equally wishes the injured students a speedy and full recovery.” the statement read.

The statement further advised all students of the institution to avoid unnecessary and night travels and always seek permission from the university authority before embarking on any trip outside the institution’s campus.

“The University of Nigeria will always prioritize the welfare and safety of all students and will continue to provide the necessary support to those affected by this unfortunate incident,” Egwu said.
