Residents of Jaleyemi area of Osogbo, Osun State, were thrown into confusion yesterday, after the lifeless swollen body of a young lady was discovered in her room.

The deceased, identified as Kemisola, an indigene of Igbajo Town in Boluwaduro Local Government Area, was found dead by a neighbour yesterday morning.

According to residents, Kemisola, a hair stylist who lived in a storey building, may have committed suicide on Monday with her decomposing body discovered after a strong, strange odour began filling the building.

A neighbour, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he first noticed the odour on Tuesday evening, adding that he assumed the odour was from a dead rat. "This morning, I saw that her apartment door was open and I called out to greet her, but she didn't respond," the neighbour said.

"That was when I decided to check on her, and I was shocked to find her decomposing body lying on the bed. I don't even know her full name. We only exchanged greetings and occasional chats as neighbours."

When journalists visited the house, Kemisola's phone was seen close to her head, while a knife and a bottle containing an unknown substance were also discovered at the scene.

Another resident, Omolara, described Kemisola as a jovial person and said she saw her on Monday evening when she returned home. Omolara explained that neighbours may not have realised Kemisola was in the house because she had moved in with her maternal uncle three months earlier and only visited the apartment occasionally.
