Retired Colonel dies in bathroom

By Emma Elekwa

A 54-year-old retired Colonel was reported dead on Tuesday after he slumped in the bathroom in his house in Pipeline area of Kubwa, a satellite town of the FCT.

The deceased, identified as Mohammed Mshelia, was said to be a hypertensive patient and was suspected to have died after slumping and hitting his head on the slippery tiles in the bathroom.

City News gathered that he had complained of dizziness for sometimes, a development the wife suggested they sought for medical attention, but was turned down by the deceased who insisted on the medication he was placed on.

The source said his wife had left for work in the morning of that fateful day when he entered the bathroom to take his bath.

"It was his daughter's call to inform him about her successful graduation from medical school that gave the hint that all was not well. The father's phone kept ringing without any response," he said.

According to the source, the daughter eventually called the mother who hurriedly rushed back home after getting the same response her daughter
