The deceased was standing trial in a court in Osogbo over a murder case and he was remanded in court few weeks ago and later granted bail.

At the time of filing this report, the cultists were on rampage in Osogbo as they were said to be hunting other members of Olugbodi's camp.

The state commissioner of police, Fimihan Adeoye, confirmed the incident and said the situation was under control.

Meanwhile, a top security personnel in the state who spoke on condition of anonymity expressed worry over the way the court was granting bail to the cultists when arrested and arraigned.

He said, "The court is not helping us. We will risk our lives to arrest those criminals and arraign them but the court will just release them on bail. The boy who was killed today was arraigned recently over murder and remanded in prison. Few weeks later, the court granted him bail and trouble started again which has now led to his death."
