According to Raymond, the victim told him that he had money and that he lured him to a building where he stabbed him to death but did not find any money, adding that after killing his friend, he took away his tricycle to sell.

The suspect made the revelation at the state police command while being paraded alongside 42 other suspected armed robbers and kidnappers.

While parading the suspects, the state's Commissioner of Police, Edward Egbuka, said the success of the arrests followed the effort of the police to fight all forms of criminality in the state.
