“Her confession came when the baby’s body was found floating and brought to the station,” Edafe said.

Blessing, while being paraded by the police, narrated how she was abandoned by the baby’s father, Ugo, and left to fend for herself and the child.

“I was angry and overwhelmed by the way people judged me. They called my child a bastard. I was the only one caring for him because his father abandoned us. I regret everything. That baby was my first and only child,” she said.

SP Edafe appealed to the public to be cautious with their words saying, “stigma can drive people to unimaginable actions.”

“Let’s be more empathetic and supportive to those facing challenges. The suspect is in custody as investigations continue,” he added.
