Our correspondent gathered that the incident occurred on Thursday evening when the passengers were returning from weekly market in Bokkos.

Bokkos has a weekly market which takes place every Thursday.

Daily Trust reports that the victims were ambushed by armed men who opened fire.

Confirming the incident, the Bokkos Cultural Development Forum (BCDF), in a statement by its chairman, Farmasum Fuddang, said they were shocked and saddened by the attack despite several peace and reconciliation efforts between farming and herding communities.

“The victims were returning from the weekly market in Bokkos town when their vehicle was ambushed. Victims included women and little babies. This violence occurs despite various so-called peace and reconciliation efforts,” the chairman said.

Fuddang accused members of an ethnic groups of launching the attack, saying the fact is clear.

The latest attack, along with ongoing village burnings and takeovers in the Mushere area, has been blamed on terrorists identifying as members of an ethnic group.

“Their goal is to take control of the entire local government area, which is recognized as the potato headquarters of Nigeria.”

We are not responsible of the attack – Herders

The herding community in Bokkos has distanced itself from the attack.

Saleh Adamu, chairman of Gan Allah Fulani Development Association (GAFDAN), who denied the allegation, said, “The allegation has no basis because there is no evidence that the attack was carried out by the Fulani. And no herder was arrested at the scene to prove it was carried out by Fulani. This allegation is the first of its kind here.

“When an incident occurs, security forces do investigate before identifying the perpetrators. We condemn the attack in its totality, as the killing of innocent people is not in any way justified by any offense. We condemn the killings.”

Security yet to react
