THERE was pandemonium Friday at the Federal University of Petroleum Resources (FUPRE), Effurun, Delta State, as a final year Computer Science student identified as Jimoh Lateef was shot dead by gunman suspected to be from one of the two host communities.

The killing almost led to full blown reprisal attack by irate students but were dispersed by a team of police and army personnel deployed to the school after an alert.

A senior official of the public affairs department confirmed the incident Friday, saying the institution was temporarily shut down as tension rose.

The late student was reportedly shot in the throat by his assailant on his way to purchase food.

Friday's incident makes second in five months of such attacks on the institution's students from the host community.
