TRAGEDY struck yesterday at Kosofe bus-stop in Mile 12 area of Lagos State when a woman was electrocuted while crossing the expressway.

The Guardian gathered that the woman, who was going to Mile 12 market, while attempting to cross the road, touched a faulty electrical pole, which had contact with the railing dividing the highway which instantly led to her electrocution.

It would be recalled that barely three months ago, three people were electrocuted at the same bus-stop.

The Lagos State government had, in a bid to enforce the use of pedestrian bridges along the axis by erecting iron rails to discourage pedestrians from dashing across.

Despite the restriction and presence of Kick Against Indiscipline (KAI) officials, some pedestrians still shun the bridge and maneuver through the rail demarcation after the fitted irons had been bent. Their complaint was that the bridge at Ojota is quite far from Ketu and Mile 12, which is usually busy with traders.

According to an eyewitness at the scene, a red flag was tied on the rail to warn pedestrians against crossing from that spot. "The woman must have been unaware of the danger before she touched the pole."

Her identity could not be immediately ascertained as some touts swiftly cashed in on the tragedy and made away with the bag the woman was holding. The body was later carried to the other side of the expressway before policemen from Alapere police station came and removed it.
