The way and manner at which the five persons died has brought endless tears to the checks of their loved ones, especially wives, kids, aged parents, friends and relatives, who sees their exit as too sudden. The Guardian learnt that Badejo, who will be 38 on June 20, left behind two kids – Pemisire and Bobo, aged four and two respectively. He had just bagged his Masters degree and currently running his Ph.D. It was also learnt that he won an award of excellence last year and was preparing for an official trip to Kenya for English competition.

For Aina, he died exactly 13 days to his 34th birthday, as he was born on April 5, 1985. Though not much could be gathered about Shofoluwe's family, The Guardian learnt his aged parents have become inconsolable since they heard the sad news of their son's death. Meanwhile, an official of the Lagos State Traffic Management Authority (LASTMA), Seriki Adeyinka, has narrated how a taxi driver hit her and drove off on high speed while she hung on the bonnet of his car in Ikorodu area of Lagos State.

Adeyinka, who spoke to newsmen at the weekend, said the incident happened at about 6:35p.m. last Thursday. She said she was on the car's bonnet from Igbogbo garage on Ikorodu road to Oluwanishola filling station on Baiyeku road. "I had resumed at my duty post at Igbogbo garage by 2:00p.m. with another colleague. Usually, anytime from 4:00p.m. traffic gets busy in the area. We were controlling the traffic when the taxi driver was coming and also picking passengers at the middle of the road, he caused a lot of traffic behind him. We told him to leave the middle of the road but he refused, I was trying to stop him to let him know that what he was doing on the road was bad, but while he sped off, he hit me with the car and I fell on the bonnet of the car.

"If I had not fallen on the bonnet, the car would have crushed me. When I fell on the bonnet, instead of him to wait, he moved on with a high speed. I struggled to hold something on the bonnet; he still drove on high speed and was swerving, trying to throw me down but I held on to something. While the car was moving people were trying to stop him but he was speeding and no one could stop him.

"Even when a trailer was coming, he tried to swerve me to the trailer maybe I would fall off from the bonnet, but as God would have it, I did not fall because I was holding the bonnet tightly. But thank God an eyewitness who was driving behind was later able to overtake him and he stopped at Oluwanishola filling station on Baiyeku road".

Adeyinka said her hands were still painning her as she used it to hold the bonnet tightly. She said she is still in pains on her knee, which the vehicle hit, adding that her shoulder was dislocated. She said she is still under treatment. "It should not be when LASTMA officials are killed that it should be taken up. This taxi driver should pay for what he has done, it is total wickedness and to me he is like a murderer, he should get the consequences of what he has done," she said.
