

Boko Haram landmines kill 11 Nigerian security personnel

By AFP
30 December 2020 |
9:54 am

Lemon, snail slime and tomatoes won't 'remove appendix' – visit doctor for appendicitis

26 Dec

Boko Haram PHOTO: AFP

Landmines planted by Boko Haram jihadists have killed 11 security personnel, including four soldiers in northeast Nigeria, security sources said Tuesday.

Seven hunters recruited to help the military fight the Islamist insurgents were killed on Tuesday when their vehicle hit a landmine in the village of Kayamla, outside Borno State's capital Maiduguri.

ABCON tasks CBN on forex stability in 2021

1 hour ago

“Seven hunters died in the explosion and nine others are badly injured,” Babakura Kolo, the head of a local anti-jihadist militia, told AFP.

“Their vehicle hit a landmine as they were pursuing Boko Haram insurgents,” he added.

Another local militiaman confirmed the incident.

Four Nigerian soldiers were killed on Monday when their vehicle hit a landmine planted by Boko Haram fighters in Logomani village near the border with Cameroon, two security sources told AFP.

There has been a sharp increase in attacks in northeast Nigeria since the start of the month.

Nigeria records 1,204 new COVID-19 cases, highest daily surge ever

1 hour ago

