

Police inspector dies in alleged escapade with widow in Ibadan

From Moyosore Salami, Ibadan

A 47-year-old police inspector, Michael Ogunlade, has allegedly died during an encounter with his secret lover, (name withheld), at a hotel in Ibadan, Oyo State. Capital.

The Guardian learnt that the deceased took the secret lover to hotel and died in the process.

A hotel source said the incident happened around 3:15 p.m., on Sunday, shortly after the duo paid for a short rest at the hotel, located in the Oke-Ado area of Ibadan.

The source said: "They met me at the staircase, but being one of the workers, I cannot be looking at their faces. So, I just ignored them. A few minutes later, the woman rushed down and started crying, saying the man was unconscious."

"We quickly informed the police at Iyaganku Police Division and they came around quickly, but before they could take him to a nearby hospital,

CP Onadeko

he had given up the ghost."

One of the hotel's attendants said: "I don't know her, but the way she was talking after the incident, she had lost her husband in 2014."

"She even said the deceased was responsible for the payment of her children's school fees for more than five years among other expenses."

"Where will I start again? He was my helper. My benefactor. He was like my husband because we saw him every Sunday. "Apart from once a week, the woman said the deceased always responded to anything she asked him."