The Police have arrested two female Polytechnic undergraduates for allegedly killing a nightclub owner during a sexual escapade.

The suspects, Joseph Joy Adanma and Vandora Oreoluwa Favour had during sex romp, tied Mr. Adeniyi Ojo, the son of Chief Emmanuel Ojo, a prominent figure in Ilorin, Kwara State to a hotel bed, stole his phones and other belongings, and killed him.

The police intelligence team had tracked the stolen phones to their abode in Mowe, Lagos, where they were arrested.

While parading the suspects in Abuja, police spokesperson, Olumuyiwa Adejobi said: “On October 6, police operatives apprehended the two suspects, Adanma and Favour, who are both students of Kwara State Polytechnic for their involvement in the robbery and murder of Mr. Ojo.

“Through meticulous investigative work, our officers were able to track and apprehend these suspects in Mowe- Ibafo, Ogun State.

“In the tragic incident, the duo tied the deceased under the guise of having a sex romp and demanded money from him. But when he was not forthcoming, they resorted to drugging and suffocating him, leading to his untimely demise.

One of the suspects, who spoke to newsmen, Adanma said she had been in sexual relationship with the deceased, and on that day, they went with the intention to steal from him, but when he wasn't succumbing, they drugged him and left with his phone and other valuables only to discover that he had died later.
