At least one person was on Wednesday morning sent to an early grave during a bloody clash between two communities in Ogun State.

It was gathered that some armed youths from Idomaroko village invaded Idoye village, a neighbourhood in Egungedo area of Igbesa in a hired bus, armed with dangerous weapons.

They were said to have immediately began razing the homes of their targets and destroying properties.

A male victim, popularly known as Apollo, was killed in the fracas.

Daily Independent learnt that the attack was a result of an age-long land tussle between the two communities.

Impeccable sources informed that the traditional ruler of Idoye village, John Bankole and members of his family have gone into hiding for possible fear of attack.

However, as at the time of filing this report, policemen from Agbara police division were yet to get to the scene.
