No fewer than eight persons have so far been reported dead at the University of Benin Teaching Hospital (UBTH), following the burns from kerosene explosions now ravaging Abraka, Oghara, both in Delta State and Benin City, Edo State, in the past two weeks.

The first on the casualty list were the six children of Hope Adeleke, a police officer whose family living at Oghara, headquarters of Ethiope West Local Government Area of Delta State. They died serially as a result of the severe burns they received when fire gutted their home.

Their mother, who was also burnt, is currently receiving treatment at the Intensive Care Unit of the Accident and Emergency Ward.

Similarly, a woman, whose identity could not be ascertained, was said to have also died during the week at the same hospital as a result of kerosene explosion.

Reports had it that the woman and one of her children were rushed to UBTH from Ekehuan village, near Benin City, following burns from the explosion. The child was said to have survived after treatment and has since been discharged.

At present, Adeleke, whose six children have died from the Oghara kerosene explosion, is said to be under deep emotional stress with experts battling to stabilise his condition.

On Saturday, a 12-year-old girl from Kwale, Ndokwa West Local Government Area of Delta State, died from kerosene explosion said to have occurred at her home.

Investigation, however, revealed that the girl was rushed to the UBTH on Friday morning after the incident.

According to Dr. Eddy Ehikhamenor, director-general of Save Accident Victims of Nigeria (SAVAN), the girl received 93 degree burn.

On the serial kerosene explosions, which appear to be as a result of scarcity of the product, Dr. Ehikhamenor called on the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) to warn all dealers and retailers against adulteration of kerosene.

He queried the high cost of kerosene that now sale between N130 to N150 per litre, which probably causes the adulteration, and urged the NNPC to embark on analysis of kerosene currently on sale to ensure that the product does not have a mixture of petrol, as, according to him, "the corporations owe Nigerians safety".
