The sleepy and serene community of Idere in Ibarapa North Local Government Area of Oyo State was in pensive mood on Friday, as the late Adepegba Adegbenjo popularly called “Afin” was laid to rest.

The late Adegbenjo represented Ibarapa Central/North Federal Constituency from 2003 to 2007 on the platform of Alliance for Democracy (AD).

Adegbenjo, a senior lecturer at the Estate Management Department of the University of Lagos and a Labour Party (LP) senatorial aspirant, died on December 22 in a motor accident on the Lagos-Ibadan Expressway.

The burial of the former member of the House of Representatives attracted eminent personalities, politicians and clergymen who came to pay their last respect.

Among dignitaries present at the funeral were former governor and LP governorship candidate, Adebayo Alao-Akala, his running mate, Sharafadeen Alli, LP National Vice-Chairman, South-West, Bashir Apapa.

Others were former Deputy-Governor and APC Chieftain, Iyiola Oladokun, Caretaker Chairman, Ibarapa Central Local Government, Akinyemi Akinlabi, and Oyo

LP Chairman, Gbenga Olayemi.

In his sermon, the Bishop of Elekuro Diocese and Presiding cleric, James Olusegun, admonished politicians to always embrace the righteous path by laying worthy legacies.

According to him, “Death and sorrow are universal, but the most important thing is how a man makes use of his time, bearing in mind that we will all give account of how we have lived our lives to our creator.”
