BY BUKOLA IDOWU, Lagos

Yesterday ended on a sad note for some fun seekers at the Bar Beach in Lagos when a man in the company of friends drowned at the banks of the ocean.

Reports say the man and his friends had stayed far from the usual area where fun-seekers converge until one of them raised the alarm that one of them was drowning.

Although those around made frantic efforts to save the man, they could not rescue him.

According to National Emergency Management Agency (NEMA) spokesperson, Ibrahim Farinloye, the Bar Beach incident brought the number of those drowned at the Bar Beach to five in 12 days. According to him, four people drowned on January 1.

"It is pertinent to advise people along the coastlines that the climate change effects are fully here; therefore, the need to be safety conscious as they embark on their various activities in the areas," he said.
