A frontline Igala leader, Yusuf Adejo, has described the death of prominent Igala sons and daughters in recent times as a bad omen to the Igala nation and has called for prayers to uproot the spirit that has been killing his kinsmen at their prime age.

Adejo, a retired police officer, made the call in his country home, Ade-Okpo in Olomaboro local government area of Kogi state during the interment of a former lawmaker, Damian Adejo (Okadigbo).

Adejoh said the people of the east senatorial district were at a crossroads over the recent harvest of deaths in their community.

Adejo who said he would continue to remember his deceased junior brother for his hardwork and philosophy of life, noting that the call for prayer from His Royal Majesty, Michael Idakwo Ame-Oboni 11, Ata Igala, was timely, considering the loss of Igala leaders recently.

He said the time had come for every Igala person to be prayerful to avert the ugly happening in the land.

Speaking in the same vein, Comrade Daniel Isah, said, "it's a case of death too many in the district," and added that all hands must be on deck to put the light of death ravaging the areas out on time.
