Three soldiers and two vigilante members have been killed as Boko Haram insurgents launched an audacious attack to retake Izghe town over the weekend.

The attackers reportedly lost many fighters as the soldiers in conjunction with the vigilante operatives resisted them leading to a gun duel that lasted many hours before the soldiers finally subdue the attackers.

A vigilante member who preferred anonymity noted that the rampaging insurgents were forced to flee after soldiers call off their bluff as they gallantly confronted them.

He noted that "They engaged the military for hours, killing three soldiers and two vigilantes members before they were finally over powered and fled through the connecting bush but they removed some corpses of their fighters",

When contacted on phone, dislocated residents of the town said they had left the town since it came under the attack of the gunmen noting that they could not ascertain civilian casualty figure as everyone runs for dear life.
