Gunmen kill 11 in fresh Adamawa attack

GUNMEN believed to be Boko Haram militants have killed 11 people, including a pastor at Sabon Gari Yamdula, Madagali local government area of Adamawa State.

The Friday night insurgency is the latest in the long list of attacks in the Northeast, where soldiers are currently locked in a battle with the terrorists.

Madagali local government area is close to the boundary with Borno, the sect's principal stronghold.

Chairman of Madagali council, Maina Ularamu, said of the Friday attack: "Yes, some gunmen we believed are the same fighters of Boko Haram unleashed a new round of violence on Sabon Gari Yamdula on Friday night and killed - as at the moment - 11 people."

He said the militants tried to burn down the entire village but "were repelled by the youths of the area who came out with locally made guns." Vigilante youths firing guns set them to flight and soldiers were later deployed.

Ularamu said that the pastor was rushed to the hospital but died.

"It was while repelling them that the security agents later arrived before the terrorists retreated."

The Sabon Gari attack came days after gunmen suspected to Boko Haram insurgents killed over 50 people in an attack on a church in the Chakawa village of Adamawa.

In a separate attack, police reported that a bus Friday set off an improved explosive device on the highway through nearby Kuthra village in Borno State, killing seven passengers.
