A 300-Level Sociology and Anthropology student of the Obafemi Awolowo University (OAU) in Ile-Ife, Osun State, Crownwell Nwosu, has died after he allegedly fell from the six-storey Faculty of Agriculture building.

Corwnwell on Tuesday fell from the topmost floor and was rushed to the OAU Teaching Hospital (OAUTH) by cleaners, who were sweeping the floor when the incident happened. It was gathered that students at the first floor ran away without making efforts to help him.

Crownwell died days after the incident.

The student was said to be playing with his colleagues whose identities could not be ascertained at press time. The late Crownwell was said to have bled for minutes, before he was discovered by the cleaners and rushed to the hospital.

The Division of Students' Affairs confirmed the death, but there has been no official statement from the university. It was learnt that the deceased's parents had taken the body to Imo State for burial.

His classmates, who spoke under the condition of anonymity, said the late Crownwell was a brilliant student, who had the highest Cumulative Grade Point Average (CGPA).
