The body of a dismissed police sergeant, Daniel Iremiren, who was reported missing last April 11, has been found at the Mainland General Hospital Mortuary.

It was found last Friday after over two months search for the late Iremiren.

The late Iremiren, who hailed from Sabongida Ora, the headquarters of Owan West Local Government Area of Edo State, was dismissed from the police seven years ago. He had left his 25, Suleiman Street in Igando, Lagos home for Cele Bus Stop last April 11 and never returned.

It was learnt that he usually went there to escort buses.

Speaking with The Nation last weekend on how she found her husband's body, Mrs Margaret Iremiren said it was after a long search.

She said: "I said to myself that even if my husband died, I should see his body. I went with my husband's friend, Friday to Cele Express again. We met a man I used to know with my husband, we call him 'Water', I asked him about my husband, he directed me to a policeman, Collins Adewumi. It took us some days before I could convince my husband's friend and a family member to approach Collins."

Adewumi, The Nation learnt, is also an escort policeman like the late Iremiren.

Mrs Iremiren continued: "Collins told me that there was a serious incident when my husband escorted a driver. He gave us a vehicle registration number that plies Orile through Oshodi. We got the vehicle, its conductor and the driver with the help of a policeman at Cele bus stop, who took them to Ejigbo Police Station.

"The driver and the conductor told us that as they were driving from Orile with my husband around 8:30pm, when they were stopped by some hoodlums (Agbero) who asked him (the conductor) for the money they usually collect. The conductor, simply identified as Onyeka, refused to give the Agbero money, the Agbero removed the screen wiper of the vehicle.

"My husband was said to have got off the vehicle to ask for the screen wiper when the leader of the Agbero hit him three times on his chest, saying 'Policeman, can you stand us?' and gave him the wiper. When he returned to the vehicle, Daniel was said to have gasped for breath and died immediately.

"The driver went to hide the body that night and later dumped it at Oke-Afa in Isolo. The driver is at large with his family. The Agbero was also nowhere to be found. I was told a pastor found his body lying close to the canal and reported to the Ejigbo Police Station.

“After we made a statement and we were taken to Mainland General Hospital mortuary to see if the man in question was my husband, we were able to identify him, after we paid N13,000 before the mortuary attendant could bring his body out. My husband’s body was among those to be given mass burial this week.”

The Nation learnt that the bus is in Ejigbo Police Station and the case transferred to the State Criminal Investigating Department (SCID) at Pantì, Yaba, Lagos Mainland.
