The man's car... yesterday

Driver of an Hyundai car marked KJA421AH was yesterday confirmed dead after a petrol laden tanker rammed into his vehicle.

The 33,000 liter tanker marked AGL664XG, belonging to Forte Oil spilled its content into nearby drainages when the accident occurred around 3am at Ikorodu roundabout in Lagos.

The tanker driver was said to have lost control while trying to make a U-turn.

The police, officials of the National Emergency Management Agency (NEMA), Lagos State Emergency Management Agency (LASEMA), Fire Service, the Federal Road Safety Commission (FRSC), Nigerian Security and Civil Defence Corps (NSCDC) and Lagos State Traffic Management Authority (LASTMA) were said to have mobilised to the scene to prevent fire.

It was gathered that the motorist, whose car was wrecked, was trapped in it until the first responders got to the scene at about 4:30am.

LASEMA General Manager Adesina Tiamiyu and NEMA spokesman Ibrahim Farinloye said the prompt response of emergency workers prevented an inferno that would have wreaked havoc in the densely populated area.

"Prompt response prevented the incident from escalating into a major disaster with the spillage and also proximity of the incident to a filling station.

"The truck was carefully lifted upright, while the dead body was extricated with the use of light duty equipments and subsequently taken to Ikorodu General Hospital Mortuary. The vehicles were cleared off the road and handed to the police.

“Proper investigation would be carried out on the cause of the accident by the relevant government agencies. Motorists, especially articulated truck drivers are advised to avoid over speeding and also adhere to all traffic rules and regulation,” said Tihamiyu.
