Justice Sedoten Ogunsanya of an Ikeja high Court yesterday sentenced a school bus driver, Godwin Etute, 32, to death by hanging.

Etute was condemned to death for killing a colleague, Miss Tolulope Adisa, with a screwdriver for insulting him.

The driver, an indigene of Edo State and the deceased, who assisted him in guarding the pupils while he drives, were employees of Value Land Nursery and Primary School at 13 Lateef Lasisi Street, Egbe, Lagos.

The prosecutors, Adebayo Haroun and M. M Balogun, told the court that the convict was employed barely eight months before the incident.

He was said to have committed the crime on January 27, 2012 around 6am behind Aris Hotel, Egbe Lagos.

According to Haroun, the convict, who claimed to have endured insults from the deceased, took her in the bus to a solitary place and killed her.

The prosecution said on getting to the place, he ordered her out of the bus and stabbed her viciously on the left side of her neck with a screwdriver.

Haroun said the covict dragged Adisa's body into the bus and dumped her behind Aris Hotel.

The convict, he said, sped off to wash off the blood stains on him and the bus.

The body, the prosecution said, was found by a lawyer who reported the matter at Ikotun Police Station.

The prosecution said: "Onlookers, present at the crime scene to identify the body, also found a shirt stained with blood hidden, at a corner, which was identified as belonging to the driver during investigation".

Haroun said the convict admitted committing the crime in his confessional statement to the police.

In her judgement, Justice Ogunsanya held that the prosecution proved its case beyond reasonable doubt.

The judge found the convict guilty, saying there is a direct link between him and the blood soaked shirt.
