Residents of Omi Adio in Ibadan, the Oyo State capital, may have a showdown with the police, following the death of a commercial driver, Tirisimiyu Oladosu, a few metres to a police check point on the Ibadan-Abeokuta Expressway.

Security has been strengthened around the station to prevent a break down of law and order.

An eyewitness said the accident occurred about noon on Saturday.

“The victim was crushed to death by an oncoming commercial bus with registration number Lagos AKD 07 XP.

“The deceased parked his bus with registration number DGB 620 XA by the road and crossed to meet the policemen at the check point .

“As he was returning to his vehicle, an oncoming commercial bus knocked him down. He died on the spot.”

The body was released to the family by the police and has been buried.

Members of the community are blaming the police for the death.

But the police have denied the allegation, saying the accident was not caused by officers.

The spokesperson, Adekunle Ajisebutu, said: “The accident was not caused by the police. The accident happened after a police stop and search point.

“The victim reportedly parked along the road to check a mechanical fault and was about entering his vehicle when he was knocked down.

“The police assisted in taking him to the hospital. The other driver has been arrested.”
