The traditional ruler of Oghoghobi community in Ikpoba-Okha Local Government of Edo State, Kingsley Omorose, has fled his community after villagers set ablaze his palace.

Other property belonging to the monarch was torched, including those owned by his loyalists.

The villagers stormed the palace after gunmen allegedly killed a former youth chairman of the community, Mr. Lambert Igbinomwahia, popularly called 'Let them say.'

The deceased was killed at his home by gunmen.

A source said the villagers suspected the monarch to be the mastermind of the killing, as he allegedly threatened him.

The deceased's mother, Magdalene, said Lambert was her only son.

She said: “The Enogie called my son and told him to stop selling land. My son said he had not been selling land.”

Magdalene urged security agencies to arrest her son’s killers.

The embattled traditional ruler, who spoke through phone, described the allegations as false, saying it was a plot to dent his image.

He said he could not plan evil against his subject and confirmed that there was an issue between the deceased and the community.

Police Commissioner Haliru Gwandu, who confirmed the incident, said he drafted men to the area immediately he received a signal.

He said the issue was between the deceased and the monarch.
