The police in Ebonyi State have arrested three suspected cultists for allegedly killing a 19-year-old boy, Michael Okoro.

Okoro, according to the police, was killed at Oroko Onuoha in Abakaliki, Ebonyi State capital, when two cult groups clashed.

Police spokesperson Loveth Odah confirmed the incident.

She, however, said the victim was not killed, but died from injuries sustained after a clash between Junior Python and Black Pander cults.

Odah said: "Cultists clashed at Oroko-Onuoha. The police nabbed three of them. One person died in the clash.

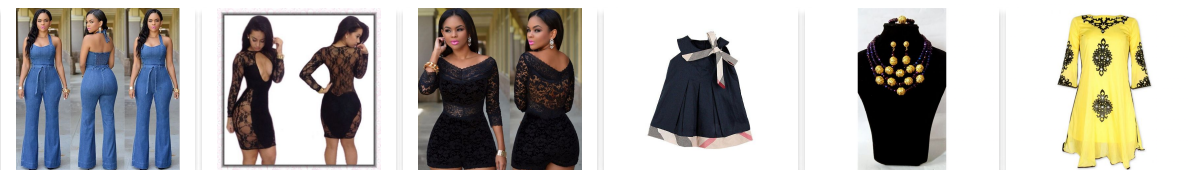

"He was not murdered, he died during the clash. He lived at Kpirikpiri but was not killed in the place. One person was injured. He later died. The arrested suspects confessed that it was a cult clash. We have started investigation."

The victim's mother, Mrs. Clara Okoro, denied that his son was a cultist.

Speaking from her 3, Muoneke Street, Abakaliki home, she claimed that her son worked in a cement factory at Nkalagu.

Okoro, in a pensive mood, said the deceased took care of his three siblings.

She said: "My son returned from office. He brought money to pay the WAEC fee of his younger brother as he promised.

"He gave me the money before going to watch a football match that evening. He didn't return that night.

"In the morning, I went to pay the WAEC fee. When I returned, I still didn't see him. I became worried. Somebody later told me that Michael had been killed.

"I don't know if he quarrelled with anyone because he did not live here, but in Nkalagu where he worked."
