

Suspected robbers kill nurse in Lagos

by Precious Igbonwelundu — May 27, 2019 in News0

A nurse at the National Orthopaedic Hospital, Igbobi, Lagos, who was pushed off a moving bus by suspected robbers last Wednesday, has died.

The victim, Victor Aderoju, 33, a nursing officer II, died at the Lagos University Teaching Hospital (LUTH), Idi-Araba where he was taken to by emergency workers after he was found unconscious near Bolade bus stop, Oshodi.

It was gathered that the victim had boarded a bus early on Wednesday morning on his way to work, not knowing that the bus was being operated by one-chance robbers.

After dispossessing him of his belongings, the robbers reportedly pushed him off the bus, which led to his sustaining a head injury.

Aderoju was said to have regained consciousness at the hospital where he narrated what happened to him, but he eventually died last Thursday.

A guard at the Lagos State Polytechnic (LASPOTEC), Ikorodu campus, Mr. Cletus Williams, last Friday allegedly killed his colleague, Okoro John, for rituals on the school's premises.

The deceased and the suspect, The Nation learnt, were employees of KRAMO-TEE, a private security company.

It was gathered that the duo were on night duty when Williams cut the throat and wrist of Okoro.

He was said to have been caught by other guards on duty and he fled into the bush, but they pursued and apprehended him.

After he was arrested, the guards, our correspondent learnt, contacted the Chief Security Officer (CSO) of the school, who informed the police.

Contacted, spokesman for the school Olarenwaju Kuye, said: “As I speak to you, the police are investigating the incident. The suspect has been transferred to the State Criminal Investigation and Intelligence Department (SCID), Panti, Yaba. The deceased and the suspect were outsourced guards from KRAMO-TEE and they were on night duty. We have called the proprietor of the company to inform her.”

A statement by police spokesman Bala Elkana, a Deputy Superintendent (DSP), said the suspect was arrested by policemen from Sagamu Road Division in collaboration with the CSO.

“The suspect used a sharp knife to slash the throat of the victim and also chopped off his right wrist. Homicide detectives from the SCIID are investigating the case to ascertain the motive behind the killing. The knife used for the murder has been recovered. The suspect will soon be arraigned for murder,” the statement said.

Elkana said the police arrested a fake soldier on May 23, around 2:40pm on the Eko Bridge.

The suspect, Musa Agile, was said to be obstructing traffic and harassing road users while being clad in military camouflage.

“The suspect confessed that he is not a soldier. Investigation is ongoing and he will be charged to court,” said Elkana.

Tags: kill nurse Suspected robbers

Previous Post

Next Post