

Police find decomposing body of farm worker on mango tree

by Ernest Nwokolo, Abeokuta August 19, 2019

The police in Ogun State have discovered the decomposing body of a farm worker, who was allegedly killed by his boss over allegation of stealing levelled against the deceased.

The family of Ismaila Mukaila is calling on the police to carry out a thorough investigation into the alleged murder.

The Nation gathered that the boy was allegedly murdered on August 11 on a farm on Adejunrin Road, Owode Egba area of Abeokuta and his remains were kept in a sitting position on a branch of a mango tree on the farm.

Read Also: Police parade inspector's killers, 116 criminals in Kano

The boy, who is said to be a farm worker, was allegedly killed by the owner of the farm.

A member of the bereaved family, who craved anonymity, alleged that the owner of the farm told Ismaila to see him on the farm on August 11, but the boy did not return home. After a search was carried out, his decomposing body was found on August 15 on top of a mango tree on the farm.

It was learnt that the bicycle the boy rode to the farm before his mysterious death was also found at the entrance to the farm.

Police spokesman Abimbola Oyeyemi confirmed the incident. He said the matter is being investigated.

Oyeyemi said some suspects have been arrested in connection with the alleged murder.

Tags: Nigeria Nigeria News Nigerian Newspaper The Nation newspaper

Previous Post

Ekweremadu: Governors, senators, others knock IPOB

Discussion about this post

Next Post

Attack on ex-Deputy Senate President rude, says Ohanaeze