

LASUSTECH shuts staff school indefinitely over student's death

By The Nation On Nov 13, 2022

The Lagos State University of Science and Technology (LASUSTECH) has shut its staff school indefinitely over the death of a student.

The late student, AbdulRahman Dauda, was said to have died after being chased into a moving car by a teacher.

Reacting to the incident, in a statement, Friday, LASUSTECH said staff school had been shut “forthwith due to the unfortunate incident.”

It said the period of closure would be used to restructure and reposition the school.

The statement further said that “students will be engaged with online learning” during the period.

According to a report, three workers of the staff school are currently being remanded in prison over alleged complicity in the death of the student.

The school had also vowed to ensure justice is served in the matter, adding that an investigation had commenced.

“We want to state that the school and Nigerian Police commenced investigations immediately after the matter was reported. Subsequently, the case was taken to the court of competent jurisdiction, and appearances started on Monday, 31 October 2022.

“The three affected members of staff who were allegedly accused of complicity in the unfortunate situation are currently remanded at the Nigerian Correctional facilities in Lagos.

“As the case is already before a competent court, we seek the public’s prayers and understanding with the school management and parents of the deceased at this moment of grief and sober reflection.”
