Suspected herdsmen have again invaded Sobe in Owan West Local Government Area of Edo State, killing a driver, Ome Osesa, abducting some persons and injuring many people in the community.

A source in Sobe told our reporter yesterday that the assailants invaded Osesa's house, and opened fire on him, and everyone in sight, injuring many people.

The source said: "The suspected herdsmen later left Omesa's residence and moved to St. Thomas Moore Primary School, Sobe, where they kidnapped some persons.

“Even the new police divisional headquarters created in Sobe, housing more than 30 policemen, has no impact, because the policemen there have done nothing to halt the attacks on the community.

“We call on Governor Godwin Obaseki to liaise with the Federal Government, so that a mini barracks can be created in Sobe, before the community turns into a graveyard.”

Police spokesman Chidi Nwabuzor said the command was not aware of the latest attack.
