The Nigerian Immigration Service (NIS) has vowed to arrest and bring to justice, the killers of its personnel on the Sokoto-Illela Road.

Gunmen suspected to be bandits killed two NIS officers and injured others at the Mamman Suka checkpoint on Sokoto-Illela road, a fortnight ago.

The Acting Comptroller of the service, Urola Caroline Adefoji, who made the vow in Sokoto during a condolence visit to Governor Ahmed Aliyu, said: "The agency is all out to pursue and capture the killers of personnel along Sokoto-Illela road to face justice. We will pursue them wherever they may be to pay the supreme price of their actions," she insisted.

Adefoji also used the opportunity to seek the support of the state government in the area of vehicles to enable effective daily border patrol operations especially against the incursion of illegal aliens and other criminal elements into the country.

The NIS boss who visited the border outpost said the service would work with the military and other security agencies against arms proliferation, cross border immigration and other illegal border activities.

Responding, the governor assured the service of support with necessities to enable it carry out its constitutional mandate.
