

Thief electrocuted at Lagos Airport

A Middle-Aged man who attempted to steal electrical cables and other equipment at the PowerHouse of the Federal Airports Authority of Nigeria (FAAN) was electrocuted, investigation has shown.

The man was trying to disconnect the installations that supply power to the Lagos Airport before he met his Waterloo.

Managing Director, FAAN, Mrs Olubunmi, Kuku, who broke the news yesterday, during the inauguration of 30 Special Forces, who would man the airport, promised to tighten security at the facility.

According to her, a lot of investment has gone into it, from the armoury to the training of the personnel to getting the arms as well as the ammunition.

Related News

- Fire outbreak at Lagos airport causes diversion in procedures
- Ekiti airport: Group drags govt to court, seeks financial details
- FULL LIST: Airports named after notable Nigerians

Read Also: Tinubu vows to eliminate insecurity in Nigeria

FAAN MD advised the personnel to leverage their training for the betterment of the facility by working with other agencies.

“This is an environment that we want to keep safe and secure. You’ve probably seen a lot of the news around some of the illicit behaviours that are happening at the airports. There have also been all sorts of activities that we also need to put some pressure on.

“But, what I would say is, I’m happy to have you on board. I’m happy that within FAAN, we have this select unit. And we can’t wait to see how you perform on your duties and your tasks.

“As you know, the Minister, as well as the National Security Adviser, and of course, Mr. President, sent their very warm regards. They’re extremely excited and delighted that you’re joining an elite squad today. I just want to let you know that we are fully behind you. All of the security agencies are working very closely together,” she said

