

violates his fundamental

Resident drowns in Ketu well while fixing faulty pumping machine

OLALEKAN OLABULO AND
SYLVESTER OKORUWA -LAGOS

THERE was confusion on Wednesday afternoon around Loveday Street in Ikosi Ketu area of Lagos State, as a resident, working on a faulty pumping machine, fell in a well.

The deceased resident was identified simply as Emeka and he was noted in the area for doing all sorts of menial jobs, including car washing.

His body was later recovered by fire fighters from the Lagos State Fire Service who came to the scene of the incident.

Nigerian Tribune gathered that the deceased was contacted to help fix a faulty pumping machine when he got trapped in the well.

Residents of the area, who noticed his difficulty to come out of the well quickly, contacted the fire service officials, who came to recover his body from the well.

A resident who simply identified himself as Sylvester stated that the Wednesday incident was the second in about a week.

Efforts to get the reaction of the director of the Lagos State Fire Service, whose officials recovered the lifeless body from the well, failed, as his mobile phone line was not available at the time of filing this report.

Operation in Ibadan over suspected kidnapper

Justice Okoro... him. However, no soldier