Son of Olugbodi, ex-deputy national chairman NURTW in Osun, killed in cult clash

OLUWOLE IGE - OSOGBO

RESIDENTS of Osogbo, capital of Osun State, were gripped with tension on Tuesday and Wednesday. This followed hostilities between two rival cult groups, which claimed the life of a son of the former deputy national chairman of the National Union of Roads and Transport Workers (NURTW), Alhaji Tomori Olugbodi.

Investigation by the Nigerian Tribune indicated that the son of the ex-NURTW leader, Ahmed Olugbodi, who was in his early 20s, was allegedly gunned down last Sunday near a football pitch at BCJA area in Osogbo by a member of a rival cult group.

The killing, which created tension in Osogbo, spiralled into reprisal attacks till

Wednesday evening, and had reportedly occurred about two months after the victim was allegedly released from prison custody over alleged murder case.

He was said to have been involved in the killing of a rival cult member around Isale Aro area in the early week of July.

Credible source informed the Nigerian Tribune that the killing of the young man, whose father is popularly known as Olugbodi, might have been precipitated by his release from custody following his alleged involvement in the killing of a member of another cult group.

Residents and shop owners at Isale Aro, Igbonna, Latona and Gbeemu arrears, where the cult members engaged themselves in deadly attacks, using guns, axes and machetes, had to scamper into safety in their bid to avoid being caught up in the melee.

Traders and shop owners in the affected areas were forced to hurriedly shut their business outlets for two days.

But the police were able to contain the violence, while normalcy had been restored to the affected areas.

Reacting to the incident in a telephone chat, Osun State Commissioner of Police, Mr Fimihan Adeoye, confirmed that one person was killed during the cult clash.

He described as untrue, speculations that more than one person was killed in the incident, saying that his command had launched investigation into the matter.
