The family members were said to be traveling in their Peugeot 504 saloon car when the accident occurred.

Eyewitness accounts revealed that Abdullahi was involved in a head-on collision when he was trying to negotiate a bend as a Toyota Hiace belonging to a popular transport company was also trying to overtake him on a top speed which led to a collision with an oncoming vehicle.

He was said to have died instantly with his three children and the wife who was five months pregnant.

The late journalist was said to have visited the state secretariat of the Nigeria Union of Journalists (NUJ) Lokoja, on a fateful day to distribute the wedding invitations, where he contributed to discussions with his colleagues before he embarked on the journey.

It was learned that he also informed his colleagues about how his car was involved in a minor accident that same day, telling them he had to fix the car at a mechanic workshop before leaving for his village.

Abdullahi described as a crack reporter had worked with several newspapers including the Sentinel, National Mirror, Royal Time and at a point was a publisher of the Trumpet before joining the AIT.
