O NDO State police command said it has commenced investigation to unravel the cause of the death of two persons suspected to be lovers in a house at Ayeyemi area of Ondo town, on Thursday.

It was discovered that the bodies of the middle-aged man identified as Eric and his unidentified girlfriend were reportedly found stuck together in the room.

According to a source, the lovers were found in a sexual position, indicating that they were having sex before they died.

The source said it took the help of a medical doctor to separate the bodies of the two lovers.

The cause of the death still remains unresolved as of the time of filing in this report, but a source attributed the incident to electrocution.

The source said: "The generator was running in the premises while they were charging their phones and a socket was placed closer to the bed. The naked wire might have had contact with the bed, resulting in their electrocution."

Another source said relatives of the man found them dead the following day when they checked on him after he failed to answer their calls.

The source said the relatives looked through the window and found the deceased, adding that they had to force open the door to gain entry inside the room.

Confirming the incident, the state Police Public Relations Officer (PPRO), Funmi Odunlami, said investigation had commenced into the incident.

She said: "The man and the woman were lovers who were known by both relatives.

"They died in the room but they were not stuck together. We are yet to know the cause but investigation had commenced."
