Tragedy struck in Onala Street, Igbare, Ijebu-Igbo, Ogun State, on Christmas Eve when an argument over the disconnection of power supply to a building led to the death of 70-year-old Yekini Adesanya.

Adesanya reportedly collapsed after he was allegedly pushed to the ground by an employee of the Power Holding Company of Nigeria, Ibukun Agbodo, after the septuagenarian challenged the PHCN workers for disconnecting electricity supply to his house in his absence. CRIME DIGEST learnt that trouble started when the monopoly power firm disconnected power supply to the house of the deceased during his absence.

A furious Adesanya, who felt the action of the PHCN workers was unjustified, accosted them, and a hot exchange of words ensued.

"In the course of the argument, Agbodo pushed the old man and he collapsed on the ground. He was certified 'dead on arrival' at the hospital," a police source said on Thursday.

The Police Public Relations Officer of the Ogun State Police command, Mr. Olumuyiwa Adejobi, confirmed the story to CRIME DIGEST on Friday, saying investigation into the unfortunate incident had commenced.

Adejobi, an Assistant Superintendent of Police, added that the Police Commissioner in the state, Mr. Musa Daura, had directed that the suspect (Agbodo), who is still in police custody in Ijebu-Igbo, be transferred to the police command headquarters, Elewera, Abeokuta, for further investigations.

The PPRO said Adesanya had been buried on Christmas Day according to Islamic injunction.
