issued for the reports.

He said he was taunted by heads of agencies who would ask him to go ahead and do whatever he liked, as "nothing has come out of the many audit reports released in the past."

Okura claimed that such effrontery was displayed by agencies because he was hamstrung by Section 85 of the 1999 Constitution to penalise them.

Police kill man

TRAGEDY struck at one of the police checkpoints along Sanni Abacha Expressway, Yenagoa, Bayelsa State, on Sunday when a policeman shot a middle-aged man in the head, killing him instantly.

Our correspondent learnt that the shooting created panic around the area and sent people, who were returning from churches, scampering in different directions for safety.

On getting to the scene of the incident, our correspondent observed that the remains of the man had been taken away to an unknown place.

The Police Public Relations Officer, Mr. Eguaveon Emopkae, said he was still waiting to be briefed on the incident.
