Chinese Officials Steal $120b

News agencies reported today that thousands of corrupt Chinese officials have stolen more than $120 billion and fled overseas since the mid-1990s — and the U.S. was a top destination, according to a report released by the country's central bank.

The report, released this week by the People's Bank of China, says between 16,000 to 18,000 government officials and executives at state-owned enterprises smuggled about 800 billion yuan ($123 biljet – not that there is anything wrong with owning one. They are a blessing and can be used to further the Gospel. But we do not own one. We are definitely not among the wealthiest in Nigeria. Take note, we are not against the wealthy or the richest or having private jets, assets or houses all over the world. We are definitely not among because there is not enough to keep.

In an interview yesterday with our correspondent, TB Joshua said that it does not make sense to accumulate billions of naira while there are millions of needy lurking all around him. “I will rather feed the hungry than to keep the money in the bank,” he said.

A senator representing Ekiti Central Senatorial District, Babafemi Ojudu, has taken a swipe at the government over the state of roads in the country.

Senator Ojudu decried the government’s neglect of the bad roads, adding that they have become death traps across the country.

Ojudu, a seasoned journalist who was recently inaugurated into the seventh session of the National Assembly, is particularly worried that the government over the years has demonstrated an attitude that indicates that the lives of its citizens do not worth more tified, the teacher of the boy, Mrs. Ibuola and another teacher have been arrested by the police and detained at Alapere Police Station in connection with the death.

P.M.NEWS learnt that Lawal had gone to ease himself after school closed at 1 p.m. on Wednesday, but slipped and fell, his head downward.

It was gathered that about thirty minutes after the tragic fall, at 1.30 p.m., other pupils who had also gone to ease themselves saw Lawal’s still legs and alerted the school authorities.

Lawal was brought out dead, with human waste all over his body, eyewitnesses said.

President Olusegun Obasanjo through Patents and Designs on December 6,2000.

The Anglican priest was one of the few Nigerian brains who was picked for a foreign Scholarship in 1971. He has a Clinic known as Christian Medical Centre, Port Harcourt where 25 HIV/AIDS patients have been treated. He said he was ready for any scientific challenge anywhere in the world. On his latest claim, he said: “God wants to prove that with Him nothing is impossible for they that have absolute trust in Him. This is the time for Nigeria ”

He said his breakthrough is scientific not herbal. He said he first tested his drugs on small mammals and later humans. “All the drugs in the market are on reversing the hand of the natural process of DNA to RNA in protein and the persons look cured, but not cured. By God’s grace, I can now cure AIDS through chemotherapy.”

On his next plan, Dr. Ngochindo said: “The federal Government has given the patent. What is required now is for me to produce it to NAFDAC and SON specifications. This is where we need assistance and partnership with the Federal Government, the state, companies and others for us to mass produce the drug for the world.”
