stabbed to death

OLUWOLE ADEBOYE

A 21-year old youth, Olumide Afolabi, has been stabbed to death over N50.

The deceased, a spray painter and a native of Oyan in Osun State, until his tragic death, resided with his mother and stepfather at 3, Church Street, Oke-Odo, Agege, Lagos State, Southwest Nigeria.

P.M.NEWS investigation revealed that Olumide and the suspect simply identified as Ismaila were playing the game of betting yesterday in front of a house at 32, Omidiji Street, Oke-Odo.

Trouble started when Olumide won N50 and Ismaila insisted that he should not take the money away, complaining that he had not eaten since morning.

Ismaila got angry when Olumide did not listen to his plea and broke a bottle. Sensing danger, Olumide ran for

Boko Haram Kills Again In Maiduguri

ADI FEMI/Kaduna with agency report

Suspected members of a radical Islamist sect, Boko Haram, which bombed Nigerian police headquarters on Sunday opened fire on a crowd of card players killing two in a northern city, a senior military officer said.

Two motorcycle-riding gunmen suspected of being members of Boko Haram pumped shots into a crowd of people playing cards outside a house in the city of Maiduguri and disappeared into alleyways, said the officer who did not want to be named.

"The group of men were playing cards under a tree outside a house when two men on a motorcycle believed to be Boko Haram members opened fire on them, killing two people and seriously injuring five others," the officer told AFP.

"The attack is a typical Boko Haram (shoot-and-run) style," the military officer said.

Boko Haram claimed Nigeria's first suicide bombing last week Thursday, which killed several people at the police headquarters in the capital Abuja.

The sect has staged attacks targeting government institutions, politicians, churches and beer drinking spots in what has become a low-level insurgency since last year. Dozens of people have been killed.

Card playing among young men is a common pastime in the scorching hot Maiduguri and many other northern cities where friends hang out under trees in the afternoon and play.

Meanwhile, in a bid to prevent bomb attack in state, Kaduna Police Command has deployed more armed policemen and anti-bomb squad personnel to major areas identified as potential black spots.

A joint team of armed policemen and soldiers were seen this morning around the Sir Kashim Ibrahim Government and Usman Hassan Katsina State House, Kawo, the police headquarters and major roads in the state.

Following the police Headquarters bomb attack by Boko Haram last Thursday, the police command has remained vigilant with constant patrols across the nook and crannies of the state.

The Kaduna Police Public Relations Officer, Aminu Lawan who spoke with P.M. NEWS said the police in the state are not ready to allow any security lapse, especially during this period when the bombers have embarked on "suicide mission."

According to him, intelligence report revealed that the Boko Haram sect plans to attack some northern states and Kaduna was listed among the states.

"It is against this background we have taken adequate measures to check and monitor the state to stop the attackers from carrying out their threats," Lawan stated.

He, however, assured the residents that the police are fully prepared to secure life and property but advised and urged everyone to be vigilant and watchful of any suspicious move by anyone.

Football Fans Boo Ex-Gov Igbinedion At Ogbe Stadium

ADEBOBOLA ALAWODE, Benin

According to William Shakespeare, the evil that men do lives after them. That indication manifested yesterday when football fans booed former Governor of Edo State, Lucky Igbinedion and rained abusive words on him during the London 2012 Olympic Games qualifying match between Nigeria's U-23 Eagles and Tanzania.

The fans were irked because during his tenure as governor of the state, the Samuel Ogbemudia Stadium, venue of the match, was in a deplorable state, forcing the Nigeria Football Federation, NFF, to blacklist it from the stadium hosting matches of the national teams.

The fans unanimously chanted ole! Ole!! Ole!!! and called Igbinedion some unprintable names while the booing lasted.

As if that was not enough, one of the fans even jumped into the VIP area, where Igbinedion was seated with other dignitaries and rained curses on him.

As the ugly scene continued, P.M Sports sampled the opinion of the angry fans. One of them, Omosuyi Apeyi, said the former governor should be ashamed of himself, "because during the governor's tenure, we football fans were denied the opportunity of watching our football stars live."

"And if not for our sports loving governor, Comrade Adams Oshiomole, who refurbished this stadium, we wouldn't have had the privilege of seeing any of our darling teams and their players."

JCI Takes Smoking Campaign To Schools

JCI Eko, a youth organisation, is again holding its quarterly seminar, JAYCESS Against Youth Smoking (JAYS), aimed at sensitising youths on the ills of smoking. The forum is holding this Wednesday, 22 June, at the Okesuna High School, Lagos Island, in Lagos.

Facilitators from the Lagos State Ministry of Health will be on ground to speak with the students and JCI Eko members will also train the participants on becoming active citizens.

A press release jointly signed by the organisation's President, Akinsola Aladesanmi, and the Project Team Leader, Olamide Oladipupo, said the initiative is part of JCI Eko's contribution to creating positive change in the society.

The first edition of the quarterly seminar, which was held at the Babs Fafunwa Senior Secondary School, Ojodu, in March, is planned to go round all the local government areas of the state.

that he travelled all the way from Delta State to watch the Olympic qualifying match between Nigeria and Tanzania, said the former governor deserves more than the booing he got from the fans.

Igeniware Emokpor, another football supporter queried the rationale behind Igbinedion's decision to come and watch the match at a stadium he allegedly abandoned during his era as governor of the state.

According to Emokpor, "the booing was not enough, we would have mobbed him. He should thank the security operatives and the maturity of some of us. We would have mobilised the fans to lynch him."

Meanwhile, Nigeria moved a step closer to the London 2012 soccer event of the Olympics as they upturned a 0-1 loss to the East Africans in Dares Salam a fortnight ago, to win the second leg match 3-0, (3-1 aggregate).

Ekigo Ehiosun increased his goal tally to 5 in the qualifiers, when he opened scoring for Nigeria in the 3rd minute, while Ganiyu Oseni and VVV Venlo of Holland's Ahmed Musa scored the second and third goals respectively to secure the last round ticket for the Eagles.
