Traffic Offenders Face Hard Times

EROMOSELE EBHOMELE

Worried by incessant traffic offences committed by both private and commuter bus drivers and even motorcycle riders in Lagos State, the government has announced plans to install secret cameras so that it could be easy to arrest and prosecute offenders.

This was disclosed by the state Commissioner for Transportation, Kayode Opeifa, when members of the state House of Assembly Committee on Transportation, Commerce and Industry paid a visit to his Ministry.

Opeifa told the lawmakers that the State Government had become uncomfortable with the traffic challenges in the state caused by violations of traffic rules.

He said plans had been concluded for the installation of the cameras which he said would be installed at strategic locations in within the state to help the ministry take shots of traffic offenders no matter how minute the offence may be.

He said the secret cameras would be linked to a power house within the ministry where officials would monitor the offending vehicles, get their registration numbers and go after them in order to them to book.

"Before the end of this year, we would have completed the installation of the cameras to inform us about traffic situation and also to make us see those violating traffic regulations.

He also told the committee that in order to strengthen the laws on traffic regulation within the state and give more powers to the regulators like the state Traffic Management Authority (LASTMA), the ministry is working on about 20 bills which would be sent to the state House of Assembly for deliberation and passage into law.

According to him, it had become important to start with the implementation of stricter punishment for traffic offenders for even simple offences like not stopping at zebra crossings for those who want to cross the roads.
