Amatari claimed he was the target of the operation by the hoodlums, saying that the bandits first invaded his apartment with different kinds of weapons which they used to break into his apartment before moving to kill other members of the vigilance group.

He confirmed that Ifeanyi died instantly, while George gave up the ghost on the way to the hospital, while being assisted by the police.

The group's spokesman expressed worry that a group which is committed to assisting security agencies to help secure the lives and property of the people could be the target of criminals. He called on the state government to come to their aid.

A senior police officer at Mile One Division, also confirmed the killing and revealed that investigation to unravel the perpetrators of the dastardly act has begun.

He further disclosed that the remains of the dead DVG operatives had been deposited in a mortuary.
