Imo State Police Command, on Wednesday, made another major breakthrough as it arrested more suspects involved in the killing of some police officers, at Ubah, Agwa, in Oguta Local Government Area of Imo State, and recovered a live python in the shrine of one of the suspects.

A statement by the State police spokesperson, Michael Abattam, revealed that the seven suspects alleged to be members of the Indigenous People of Biafra (IPOB), who were arrested at a shrine located in Ubah, have confessed to the killing of a female police officer, Felicia Nwagbara, declared missing since 2017.

Abattam said the team stormed the shrine following information gathered that the fleeing suspects had returned.

The statement further alleged that the suspects had been fortifying themselves against knives and gun attacks at the shrine and also with the help of the over 10 feet long snake.

On how they were arrested, Abattam said: "The hoodlums on sighting the police operatives, attempted to escape, only to discover that the whole escape routes had been saturated with police operatives, hence, their arrest."
