

DSS: Our operatives didn't kill Enugu baker

The Department of State Services (DSS), has denied reports of alleged killing of a baker in Enugu State, by its operatives.

The purported incident was said to have occurred on Ologo Street, Coal Camp area of Enugu over the weekend.

But, in a terse reaction to the news item (not in New Telegraph), the DSS' spokesperson, Dr. Peter Afunanya, said nothing could be further from the truth.

While harping on the time-honored principle of balance and objectivity, Afunanya reiterated the open door policy of the secret service, within the context of verification.

He said: "This is not true. It is a completely misleading information.

He further underscored the importance of asking "the simple questions as to who, where, when, why, what and how", insisting that, "This is a given in primary or foundational journalism. Then there is need for balance and objectivity"
