

Infidelity: Wife kills husband with pestle in Ondo community

Babatope Okeowo,
AKURE

A man, Seidu Jamiu, has allegedly been killed by his wife, Omolara Oluwakemi, with a pestle over an allegation of infidelity in Akungba-Akoko, in Akoko Southwest Local Government Area of Ondo State.

Sources said the incident sent shock waves around the university community as people saw the couple as perfect in their relationship.

According to a resident, the wife was said to have hit the husband with a pestle while the husband was sleeping in their house in the community.

A source said an elder from the Ibaka community of Akungba-Akoko and the Seriki Musumi of the town were called upon to come and see the unconscious Jamiu in the pool of his blood after the wife was alleged to have used a pestle to smash his head while asleep.

A resident, Chief Awesu was quoted to have noted a misunderstanding over infidelity over a 'sidechick' between the couple.

The source said the deceased was rushed to the hospital where he was confirmed dead. He said the police in Akungba-Akoko had arrested Omolara and the case had been referred to Police headquarters in Akure.

Sources said there were many sympathisers in the house where people described the deceased as a nice person who took care of his wife to the best of his ability to the extent of buying her a car and building a house for her.

Although the state Police Public Relations Officer (PPRO), Mrs Funmilayo Odunlami, confirmed the death of Jamiu, she however said the deceased's wife reported at the police station in the morning that some people killed her husband at midnight on Saturday.

The couple

She, however, could not confirm the allegation that the wife murdered the deceased, insisting that the wife was the complainant of the incident. The police spokesperson noted that no arrest had been made on the matter at the time of speaking with our correspondent.
