headquarters had the bullion van fired at by the robbers who afterwards, drove the escort van away which was later recovered.

Eyewitness accounts have it that the robbers seem to have had information about cash movement and chose the bad spot where vehicles have to slow to a stop in order to go through the gullies which have divided the road into two.

On getting to the spot, they said the robbers did not waste time in firing at the drivers and other occupants of the vans who also attempted to fire back but were overwhelmed.

"It seems the robbers got information and laid ambush with sledge hammers, guns and other implements of their trade intended to use to get the money inside the van. Unfortunately they attacked a wrong vehicle as it was not carrying so much money", a source said.
